

It was a clear evening at the mall, and 19-year-old Kayden was at the mall's arcade playing a new game called "Anime Dance Off". The gaming and console were similar to Dance Dance Revolution Arcade, but had a more anime theme than DDR did. Kayden was playing a new level featuring a cute girl character named Kami-Chan, who was dancing to the beat on a light-green background with pink cherry petals that floated around the screen. Kami-Chan looked exactly like .GIFfany from Gravity Falls, except Kami-Chan had brown hair and two triangular ears on her head like a cat and a brown fox tail. Just like .GIFfany, Kami-Chan was created by pixel artist Paul Robertson, who showed up on the game's credits screen for designing Kami-Chan. The song that was playing was the original, non-Nightcore version of "Dam Dadi Doo" by Fantasy Project, a song Kayden really liked. Kayden was indeed in love with Kami-Chan, smiling at her as she danced along and hanging on her every word when she said things like "Come on, you can do it!" and "Keep moving!". When Kayden's time was up, he walked away while a few sixth-graders sitting at a bench near the game console pointed and laughed, calling him "Lover Boy". Kayden ignored them and went home. In his dream that night, Kayden was back at the arcade with nobody around, and Kayden inserted a coin only to be greeted with a bright white screen. Kayden stepped a few feet back by the bench and a nanosecond later, Kami-Chan jumped out of the screen. Here was the girl Kayden fantasized about earlier that day, in all her pixelated, cat-eared glory. Kayden ran up to her and excitedly said, "OH MY GOSH! Kami-Chan! I'm your biggest fan! Uh, I mean, you're my favorite character. Uh, do you want to dance?" Kayden was so smitten he could barely say a word. Kami-Chan gushed, "Oh, Kayden, I would LOVE to!" She snapped her right fingers and immediately her outfit changed from her white t-shirt and blue cutoff jeans to a beautiful pixelated poofy hot-pink dress. Kayden and Kami-Chan slow-danced all night, with Kayden clasping Kami-Chan's right hand, and they kissed on the lips. Kayden's alarm broke the kiss and Kayden woke up and said, "Alas, it was just a dream." Kayden then had cinnamon squares for breakfast.

THE END.